Thomas Allen Heath (born 1947) is an American musician best known as the lead singer, rhythm guitarist, and occasional keyboardist of the band Tommy Tutone, who are most famous for their 1981 single, "867-5309/Jenny." A common misconception is that "Tommy Tutone" is Heath's stage name, rather than the name of the band. The band was originally known as "Tommy and the Tu-tones", which was shortened to "Tommy Tutone".

Jimmy moved to Los Angeles in the 90's and formed a band called Bedrock that had moderate success in the Los Angeles area. Jimmy broke away from band life in 2010 and became a solo virtuoso guitarist, after many nights of listening to Joe Satriani. Jimmy idolized Satriani's guitar riffs and told himself that he could play that way as well. "No Strings Attached" was his first single. It did quite well in Europe and Canada and is gaining a strong fan base here in America.
